FOREWORD

This report documents an engineering study of AM boosters that was commissioned by NAB and the NRSC in late 2025. Conducted by the broadcast consulting engineering firm of Cavell, Mertz & Associates (a division of Capitol Airspace Group), this study seeks to estimate how many AM radio stations might benefit from using AM boosters placed near the edge of coverage and/or in urban centers where AM reception is diminished due to reduced RF signal power and/or high levels of RF interference.

The AFAB chairperson at the time of adoption of NRSC-R104 was Martin Stabbert, Townsquare Media. The NRSC AIWG was chaired by Brian Henry, Henry Communications.

The NRSC is jointly sponsored by the Consumer Technology Association and the National Association of Broadcasters. It serves as an industry-wide standards-setting body for technical aspects of terrestrial over-the-air radio broadcasting systems in the United States.

Introduction

AM radio station reception has become difficult as the AM noise floor increases due to the proliferation of modern devices that interfere with the AM band (LED lights, “wall wart” power supplies, etc.). This is especially true in urban areas with higher population density where the noise increase is greatest. The National Radio Systems Committee (NRSC) is currently studying the use of on-frequency AM boosters as a means of increasing signal strength to urban listeners and improving reception.

One way of gauging whether an AM station might benefit from the use of a booster is to compare the population density in a station’s 25 mV/m (close-in) and 2 mV/m (farther out) contours. Stations with a higher concentration of listeners beyond the 25 mV/m contour may have opportunities to improve the listener experience by strategically locating AM boosters in farther-out population centers which theoretically suffer from high AM noise and low AM signal strength.

Study

As an initial step, Capitol Airspace Group (“Capitol”) mapped the 25 mV/m and 2 mV/m contours for each of the 4355 stations found in the FCC’s AM database. The resulting map is shown below in Figure 1.

Figure 1: All US and Territory AM Stations with 25 mV/m and 2 mV/m contours

Next, population counts were created for each AM station for the 25 mV and 2 mV contours and then were compared (See Attachment 1). The stations were ranked by difference between populations inside and outside the 25 mV/m contour and listed from stations with the greatest percentage of listeners outside the 25 mV/m contour and within the 2 mV/m contour (100%) to stations with the least percentage (lowest is 1.8%).

Several stations were chosen to be representative of the way that a booster (or boosters) could play a part in improving the coverage of the AM station and were mapped. Most good candidates for this sort of improvement appear to be suburban or “rimshot” stations into a major market where the 25 mV contour does not effectively cover the bulk of the market or doesn't cover certain areas that the station would like to cover.

Eight rimshot stations were chosen for mapping (Table 1). Shown in the final column of this table is the percent of the total population within the 2 mV/m contour that is outside the 25 mV/m contour.

Additionally, four high-power, dense urban stations were chosen (WSB, Atlanta, WHSQ, New York, WINS, New York, and KNX, Los Angeles) to demonstrate that there are close-in suburban areas which may enjoy better coverage with the use of a booster.

Each station is described below in Figure 2 through Figure 13. The light gray tick marks on each map are indicative of population scattergrams, showing density of population.

Conclusions

The particular AM stations mapped in this report are illustrative of some of the stations that would presumably benefit from having an on-channel AM booster. Each market and situation is obviously different and would require thoughtful consideration and analysis.

As can be seen in Attachment 1, there are a significant number of good candidates for increasing coverage using boosters. Using a population difference of 50% as a threshold (meaning there are an equal number of listeners within the 25 mV/m contour compared to between the 25 mV/m and 2 mV contours), over 80% of all AM stations meet or exceed this threshold and might benefit from using an AM booster.

Again, each station would need to be studied to determine whether a booster would be helpful. Clearly, as the population of the 2 mV/m contour approaches that of the 25 mV/m contour, AM boosters offer less of a benefit.

WRJR(AM), Claremont, Virginia

The 25 mV/m contour does not cover much of the densely populated area, and boosters would help the station’s reach in cities like Newport News, Norfolk, and Virginia Beach.

WUK(AM), Jackson, Wisconsin

There appear to be opportunities for boosters to the south in the Milwaukee metro (and farther down the Lake Michigan coast), and to the north just south of Sheboygan.

WBGZ(AM) – Alton, Illinois

Putting a booster(s) in the Saint Louis metro area would increase coverage in the more populated areas of the WBGZ(AM) 2.0 mV/m coverage area.

KTXV(AM) – Mabank, Texas

From looking at the antenna pattern, it is realistic to assume that KTXV is trying to penetrate the Dallas metro area from Mabank. Adding one or more boosters would allow the station to have better coverage into parts of the Dallas metro, and alternatively into Tyler if desired.

KGGF(AM), Coffeyville, Kansas

There are a number of options for a booster for KGGF(AM). To the east in Joplin, Missouri, to the south in Tulsa, and to the northwest in Wichita.

KJOZ(AM) – Conroe, Texas

KJOZ(AM) is located in far north suburban Houston, and the 25 mV signal does not cover much of the metro area. Having a booster would help to fill in their coverage to the south. The south areas of the metro area are culturally very different from one another, and having the opportunity to cover one or more of them could help the station serve the community.

KWBY, Woodburn, Oregon

KWBY is situated between Salem and Portland. Having a booster in one or both of these areas could help the station's coverage of those two markets.

WAXY(AM) – South Miami, Florida

WAXY’s 25 mV contour covers very little of the actual Miami metro area. Some strategically placed boosters could help cover communities of interest.
